

Rusts

Spores are produced by a group of parasitic basidiomycetes. They have much in common with the Smuts. Both groups produce wind-borne, resistant spores which are commonly considered plant pathogens. These are widespread amongst plants, trees, and other vegetation. They may be found in dust as part of the normal influx of outdoor microbial particles. They can cause hay fever and asthma.